Articles
Author, A. (date). Title of the journal article. Journal Title, Volume(Issue), page-page.

(See Publication Manual of the American Psychological Association 6th ed., pp. 198-202 for more examples.)

Specific examples for journal, magazine, and newspaper articles (print):

Library subscribed online database:

For items with a digital object identifier (DOI) add doi:xxxxxxxxxxx to the end of the citation. This is most common in collections such as PsycARTICLES.

For items without a DOI, use the home page of the journal or magazine at the end of the citation such as http://www.time.com. You may need to search online to find the home page.

DOI example (three authors):

Non-doi example:

Books

Print books:

From a collection of essays or anthology of articles:

Online books:

Add “Retrieved from” and the URL of the main page for the service where the book was found.

Image (from ARTstor)

Artist, A. (date) Title of Work. [Painting] Retrieved date, from resource

Websites

Author, A. (Year, Month, Day). Title of work. [Form (Blog, Website)] Retrieved, from address

Website:

Article from an online journal, not a library-subscribed database:

Article from an online newspaper, not from a library-subscribed database, no author:

Other

Online reference database (no author):

Bible and Other Sacred Texts: Reference list entries are not required for well known classical work such as religious works or ancient Greek and Roman texts. When citing, note the version used in the first in-text citation: 1 Cor. 13:1 (New International Version). In later citations just refer to the section. If you know the date translated, you can include that like so: 1 Cor. 13:1 (New International Version, 1978)

General Notes American Psychological Association (APA)

- APA requires in-text citations (author’s last name, year, and page) for quotations, paraphrasing, and references to specific passages (page numbers not required for general references).
- APA alphabetizes sources on a double-spaced References page. Pages should have a 1 inch margin.
- APA places the author and the date of publication at the beginning of the entry.
- APA does not capitalize all words in book and article titles but does capitalize titles of magazines and journals.
- APA initializes the authors’ first names; APA does not abbreviate months.
- APA requires the paper title and page number as a header (Antibiotic Resistance 3).
- The first line of a citation is not indented, but additional lines are indented five character spaces. This is called a hanging indentation.
- When no author is listed, begin the citation with the next piece of required information.
- Note: Instructors may have additional citation requirements that supplement or depart from these examples. If you have questions, consult your instructor.

Below is a cover page example: Your instructor may require additional content

Running head: DIABETES AND HEALTH

Diabetes and Health

Shirley Knot

Ivy Tech Community College North Central
References

